Is the war in Formosa serve no other end, it will be certainly useful as affording a most interesting insight into the peculiarities of the Chinese mode of dealing with a matter, Legitimists, motion regretting the suspen- outside, and was lavourable formaking attempts of the negotitations, had great assistance, based introduced at the termination of the war of of the kind. It seems from the proclamation which they have issued in Formosa, the substance of which is given by our special correspondent in the communication published yesterday, that upon coming some partial dinisterial success. The ministry has largo, about 4,000 bags of sugar, has been landed had to keep in mind, throughout, that the originated almost simultaneously with the Mewhat nearer towards actual contact with the stendered its resignation. 'It was printed a year Japanese, the Chinese officials have considerably modified the enunciations of international law by which Prince Kung in his tardy Empire. In the despatch, the world in general and Japan in particular were informed that the action of the Japanese in sending forces to Fonnosa to obtain redress was a distinct violation of the territorial rights of China, and was an insult which the affronted dignity of the Celestial Empire would not tolerate for a single moment. In the proclamation, however, issued in Formosa, seems that the propriety of the Japanese punishing the actual offenders is not denied. and the only objection taken to their proecedings is that they are going a little too far, and intend to punish other tribes who the Chinese hold are not directly simplicated. The Japanese, says the proclamation, came to the island for the purpose of punishing the Bawtans for the murder of certain Lewthewans, but as they have remained several months, and are talking of attacking some other savages, namely, those of Polam the Emperor has sent the two Commissioners. From this it would appear that the Chineso do not raise a specific objection against the and taking with him a pair of show and a wool. He sawhim no more than that. As our correspondent points till Saturday last, when he met him in Ship-Authorities of their views upon the subject; and it is somewhat confirmatory of the view some-time ago suggested in this paper that the statement by the Japanese to the effect that the Chinese Authorities a Peking had not raised any objection to their going to Formosa themselves to seek refress for the wrongs their countrymen had suffered, was correct. If such were not the fact it seems impossible not to believe that the Chinese officials would have taken up in the proclamation the much stronger ground that the Japaness were not justified in coming to Formosa at all, rather than the comparative. The defendant worked all that day, and at ly weak special plea which they now put evening came to him and said be could not link a native coin, in ordering all the Chinese utility, and there were not light upon a subject. This latter point has been brought to the notice of the Peking Authorities by the Foreign Ministers, and hence their anxiety to do something which may have an appearance of energy. If they can now succeed in inducing the Japanese to retire, they will have gained-the twofold object of making use of Japan to punish those who are as much enomies of the Chinese as of the Japanese, and of making a show of national independence and pride which, if it be after all rather hollow, has yet sufficient plausibility in it to produce a kirly satisfactory impression upon foreign milions. It is perfectly obvious that whatever high-flown fulminations the Pelving officials may be ready to put forth, the Commissioners an-

On the other hand, from the account given by our correspondent, it would not seem that there is not much to tempt the Japanese to stay; and if it be true that they have succeeded in punishing the actual malefactors, they will probably be willing to retire if they can do so onfair terms and should such prove the case, the matter will end without producing any important political effects. It is to be hoped, however, that the lesson conveyed by the Japanese to the Formosan savages will not bealtogether lost, and that they will be less disposed than heretofore to multicat shipwrecked crews who may be cast upon their shores.

We have given a brief sketch of the principal naval forces which might be arrayed against us, and it will probably be admitted that should we find all these Powers' combined to oppose us, our difficulties would be great, and our supremacy might be imperilled, but it is far from certain that our case would be hopeless. While, of course, much would depend upon the condition of our forces at the moment war broke out a great deal would also depend upon the comparative exphinsiveness of our resources and those of our exceptionally good position. In England-and we may say it without boasting, for it follows. as a matter of course, from our enlarged experience—is the first shipbuilding talent in the world. We have, it is true, only five national dook yards, but there are in England and Sootland numbers of private yards, capable of constructing the largest and most powerful vessels that our be designed; and our private builders are scarcely less experienced in the requirements of modern ships of war than the shinwrights in the Royal dockyards. On the other hand, with the exception of France and the United States, there is, we believe, not a single Power that is not indebted in some measure to the skill of British naval architects for the fleet it possesses; and should the emergency of a war render any large addition to its naval forces indispensable, there is 44,000 236,000 not one that would not be hampered and orinpled by the closing of our building yards

TEACHERS AND SCIENCE.

The Germans, who have long taken the lead in all matters relating to education, have made sincere efforts to promote scientific education in schools. They admit the classics to be an organ of high culture, but recognise that scientific training is better adapted to a certain order of minds, and that, although the training of the mental powers should be the first object l of every teacher, boys and girls ought to learn something that will boof direct use to them in later life. Even in "Volkeschule" instruction is given in the elementary facts and principles of physics and chemistry. The results are not so satisfactory as might be expected. It is often found that the knowledge of pupils is vague and shallow, and fails to stimulate either the reason or imagination. The fact is attributed partly to the inefficiency of teachers. They "get up" their subjects from text books, and frequently know little or nothing from actual experiment. Dr. Falk, the Prussian Minister of Instruction, pe coves this, actually consist?" being one of fact, can be and has, we learn from German papers, just solved with something approaching to accuracy, ingranged for the benefit of teachers a course of another and not less important problem, "What I instruction in chemistry, and physics. (Pall Moll Gazette.) ...

In Mr. Walter's speech the other day on Broadmoor Criminal Lunatic Asylum there is one statement especially deserving of attention. While admitting that the grant for Dundram Asylum-the Irish establishment which corresponds to Broadmoor -- is quite inadequate, Mr. cussion, we are deluged with comparisons. Walter pointed out, as one reason why the expenditure at Broadmoor should be higher than at Dundrum, that at the former usylum 25 per cent, of the inmutes are convicts who have become insane while undergoing sentence, whereas ut the latter-navium the proportion of this class wildest braggadocio that we could sweep the is only 10 per cent. Now, conceding that than criminals acquitted on the ground of insanity, and therefore require a larger staff to watch them, we anrely have a right to ask why the percentage is so very much higher in this country than in Ireland. It cannot be that English convicts are more predisposed to madness than Irish. If we were to judge by the Lunsey Commissioners' reports, we should rather adopt the contrary view, for certainly the increase of insanity of late years has been much more marked in Ireland than in England. Neither can it be that English prison discipline is so inhuman as to drive five persons mind for every two who become mad in Irish prisons. Admitting to the full the superiority of the limb convict system, it is not in excess of cruel and irritating severity that the Engexplanations is admitted, we must full back on malingering to account for the extraordinary number of convicts classed as insane in England. The very fact relied upon by Mr. Walter to justify the higher expenditure at Broadmoor would seem to point to this explanation. He save that these convicts require a large number of officers to maintain discipline among them. If they were really mad, it is difficult to see why this should be the case, remembering than the other inmates are secluded because of their violent attempts on life. But if they were shamming the reason would be at once upparent. How much care is needed to discover. these cares of malingering will be evident from be following extracts from the last report of the Irish Lunacy Commissioners:-"The existence of the Dundrum Asylum and the mode of life in it are as well known to convicts in Government prisons as their own system of existence. Hence, some of them play the lusatio with success; but men especially who have served in the army. Fortunately, however, for a time only. They soon overdo their part, and are not a little discomfited on being peromptority remitted to penal scryitude. Within the past year we had four such cases." And again : "Of such we have bad many examples in Dundrum, in whose regard, however, and manner of treatment no distinction whatever 'is made.

They are placed under no restraint of any kind, though most closely looked after. In fact, the fuoling of their being made special objects of suspicion and vigilance is what tends most to aubdue them, and thus after a time it occasionally bappens that the malinger socks a comparative freedom of asylum life.
